

Susan Robison

Susan is an occupational therapist who has worked in the disability sector for 15 years within government, non-government and private practice settings. She is currently employed as a Clinical Educator and Clinical Advisor with the Medical Aids Subsidy Scheme (MASS). Through her clinical practice, Susan has developed experience and skills in the prescription of people handling equipment and techniques for transferring people with disability, including those presenting with complex postural and positioning needs. Susan has extensive experience in the provision of people handling education to allied health professionals, service providers, and carers. This includes the development of a people handling module for direct care workers completing a Certificate III in Disability, and an online training package for undergraduate occupational therapy students.
